

NOTES FROM LONDON. A RUSH THROUGH GERMANY.

(By Private Wire.)
Continent Sunday.
REMARKABLE GREETING FOR ENGLISH VISITORS.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)
MUNICH, Monday.
In Germany as in Scotland the night road is that leading to the south—at all events it would appear to be the night road for visitors, if the experiences of the English journalists may be taken for example. Since Saturday morning the English guests have travelled some hundreds of miles northward. They have halted at Dresden and Munich and at both of these famous cities have been expected to greet the English in a manner which should be a source of surprise and admiration to the English. The English have been met at Dresden and Munich by a large number of English-speaking people. At the same time the cordiality displayed towards them has been most marked. Personal Kindness.
Their distress in this respect was soon relieved, for motor cars were waiting outside the hotel to take them to the city. The English were met at Dresden and Munich by a large number of English-speaking people. At the same time the cordiality displayed towards them has been most marked.
