TOPLIS'S SWEETHEART.

TRURO GIRL COURTED AT EXETER.

When the story of the shooting of Toplis, the motor-car thief and murderer, was published it was stated that he had visited Plymouth and Falmouth, and a far-fetched attempt was made to associate him with the Chacewater double murder.

There is now a new development, for a report has reached the "Western Daily Mercury" that Toplis at one time was courting a Truro girl.

At the time, it was stated, she was living in the neighbourhood of Exeter. To Per Toplis she was known as Bryant, but when she entered into correspondence with his friends and found that his name was not Bryant but Toplis.

This, of course, was before the crimes which have since come to light. When she questioned him on the subject, Toplis explained that he went under the name of Bryant because, having left the Army, he re-enlisted under another name.

Under the circumstances he could not use his own name, because it would have aroused suspicion. Bryant was the name he entered into correspondence with his friends and found that his name was not Bryant but Toplis.

This, of course, was before the crimes which have since come to light.
